MOOSE BLD'G PADLOCK SOUGHT BY DIST. ATTY.

Has Bellefonte Lodge Indicted as "Common Nuisance."

WOULD FINE OFFICERS

District Attorney Ivan Walker has instituted proceedings against the Bellefonte Moose Lodge which, if successful, will result in the officers of the organization being fined and the building closed and padlocked for one year. His action is a development of the recent raid by State police and confiscation of a quantity of home brew beer found in the grill room of the building.

Two bills, known as District Attorney's bills, were submitted to the Grand Jury last week by Mr. Walker to start his proceedings against the Moose. Two indictments were returned. One charges the Moose, as a corporation, with manufacturing, possessing and selling illegal liquor. Since a corporation, if convicted, cannot be imprisoned in jail, punishment would be had by imposing fines on the officers and trustees of the lodge.

The other bill charges the Moose with being a "common nuisance." The basis for the charge is the alleged manufacture and sale of liquor. Conviction on this charge would be followed with an order by the Court to padlock and close the building for one year.

Whether all, or only a portion, of the building would be padlocked would be discretionary with the Court. To padlock the entire building would be to close the doors to not only the grill and lodge rooms but also to the Moose Temple Theatre. The theatre portion of the building is under lease to T. Clayton Brown. It would be within the power of the Court, under the provisions of the Snyder law, to close the theatre regardless of Mr. Brown's lease, and even though the theatre had not figured in the liquor violation. In justice to Mr. Brown it should be pointed out that his theatre has not figured in the matter.

In some instances, notably in Philadelphia, the Courts have padlocked entire buildings, and in other cases have closed only those portions where liquor violations were actually committed. In the matter of the Moose, the Court could, if it so desired, padlock the grill room and permit the remainder of the building to be open for lodge and other business purposes.

Presumably District Attorney Walker will institute similar proceedings to padlock the Philipsburg Moose building, if the recent raid there results in convictions.

Convict Quickly Recaptured.

Patrick Tonsoll, Warren county convicts who escaped the Rockview Penitentiary on Sunday evening of last week, was recaptured on Thursday at Mansfield, a few miles from his home town. Tonsoll and Edward Forstal, of Allegheny county, were quartered in tents at the prison and escaped by cutting through the wire stockade. It was thought by prison officials that an automobile had aided in the gataway, but according to the man's own story, they walked over into Penns Valley, where Tonsoll purchased a ticket to Lewisburg. His companion was to go on down the line to the next station and there board the train. He failed to do so, however, and Tonsoll went on through to Mansfield by himself. A motor patrolman in Mansfield who was acquainted with the man before his conviction, apprehended him.

Two Cars in Head-on Collision.

Two automobiles figured in a head-on collision at AxeMann on Sunday about noon when an Essex coach, driven by Elliott Hollabaugh, of Coleville, skidded into a Wills Saint Claire, the owner of which is unknown. Hollabaugh was headed toward Pleasant Gap and the other car towards Bellefonte. The Essex sustained almost all of the damage, having a smashed radiator, lamps, frame and springs. None of the occupants of either car were injured.

COUNCIL NOTES

Motorists Cannot Be Made to Stop at Beacon Lights.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of Council was held on Monday evening at the Council chambers with President John S. Walker in the chair. Business was transacted as follows:

Ogden Malin was present representing the Logan Fire company, and stated that the recently passsd ordinance regarding the too great ethciency of the Logan ladder truck had been misunderstood by the members of the company. It had been brought out that the ladder truck was usually the first apparatus at fires and was greatly in the way of the speeding pumpers. An ordinance was passed to the effect that the ladder truck should wait until after all other apparatus had left the fire house before starting out. Members of the Logan company however, interpreted the ordinance to mean that the ladder truck should not attend fires at all. Mr. Malin was assured that this was not the case.

The Fire and Police Committee reported that the new panels with the large "Stop" letters on had been received and installed.

In connection with the new panels, a letter was received from borough solicitor N. B Spangler to the effect that if any motorist should disregard the stop sign and fail to bring his car to a dead stop, and was arrested for this offense, no penalty could be imposed upon him in court. In the first place no borough ordinance has been passed up to this time regarding the stop signs, and in the second, there is a stat- law that unless a car is stopped by a regular traffic policeman, the driver need not retard his car to a speed of less than 12 miles per hour. Also it was pointed out that borough ordinances do not supercede state laws at any time.

The Street committee reported the collection of $14 30 for minor street repairs.

The Water committee reported a total of $528 75 collected since the lastCouncil meeting on the 1923 water duplicate.

A rough plan for the remodeling of the pumping station at the spring was presented by Benjamin Bradley. The old structure is in a sad state of disrepair and in fact, is literally falling down. The remodeling would greatly enhance the natural beauty of this famous spot, including as it does, the stuccoing of the structure and various other repairs. The estimated cost of the necessary repairs would be approximately $6000. The plan was unanimously approved byCouncil and referred to the Water committee who will go into the probable cost more thoroughly.

The Finance committee reported a cash balance in the Bellefonte Trust company of $10 215.16 Also that three notes to an aggregate of $26,000 were due Council recommended that these notes be renewed until the next regular meeting when a much larger sum of money would be available to pay part of them off.

The second reading of the ordinance providing for a tax on amusements of all kinds was duly performed.

Cook Stove Exploded.

The sudden drop in temperature on Friday night caused an accident which might have resulted fatally for our unfortunate victim. The water line to the tank connected with the cook stove in the John Barnes home at Pleasant Gap froze during the night, and all unaware of the fact, Mrs. Barnes built a roaring fire early on Saturday morning. Naturally the water remaining in the system quickly turned to steam and shortly the entire stove literally exploded. Mrs. Barnes who happened to be the only member of the family in the kitchen at the time was struck and severely bruised by flying pieces of metal. The stove was so badly wrecked that a new one had to be installed immediately.

No Bank Decision.

The United States Supreme Court reconvened at Washington on Monday, after a month's recess, and handed down more than one hundred decisions in all manner of cases. No decision in the Centre County Bank case was among the number. Many persons had fully believed that the bank case would be disposed of when the court reconvened.

Play at Boalsburg.

The Boalsburg High school will serve a cafeteria supper at the Malta temple at that place on Saturday evening, March 7, from 5 to 8 o'clock. Immediately afterward a literary program will be presented, including the play entitled "Patriotism at Boalsburg." The proceeds will be used for the benefit of the Boalsburg High school.

SQUIRE'S ACTS ILLEGAL SPECIAL LAW IS ASKED

Justice of Peace Robinson, of Snow Shoe, Neglected to Qualify.

PERFORMED MARRIAGES

If you, gentle reader of these few lines, happened to have been married by Justice of the Peace S. A. Robinson, of Snow Shoe, on any date since January 1st, 1922, down to the present time, please take notice that you are not married at all. If the Legislature now in session at Harrisburg, is considerate enough to pass a bill introduced on Tuesday, you will again be able to consider yourself legally wedded. If not, it will become necessary to have a new marriage ceremony performed.

This most unusual state of affairs has been brought about by the recent discovery that 'Squire Robinson has not been a duly qualified 'Squire during the last three years. Meanwhile he has been performing marriages, attesting deeds, making out informations, and attending to numerous other functions of a Justice of the Peace. Every act of an official character performed by him in the three years is invalid; that is, has no standing within the meaning of the laws of Pennsylvania.

Sometime previous to January 1st, 1922, a vacancy in the office of Justice of the Peace at Snow Shoe was created by the death of 'Squire Thompson. Mr. Robinson was appointed. Subsequently he was elected to a full term. It appears that after being elected he never lifted his commission and otherwise failed o qualify as a Justice of the Peace. He says that he merely neglected to attend to the required formalities and finally forgot all about the matter. He continued to attend to the duties of the office.

A short time ago Recorder Lloyd Stover received some papers bearing 'Squire Robinson's signature, but without notation as to the date of expiration of his commission, as is required by law. Recorder Stover made a hasty investigation which revealed, so far as he could ascertain, that the only commission issued to 'Squire Robinson had expired January 1st, 1922. The Auman murder trial last week also brought the matter into question, 'Squire Robinson having made out some papers figuring in that case. The true situation was then quickly made known. Laywers agreed in saying that all of his official acts since January 1st, 1922, were void.

To undo or rather do over again, all of the 'Squire's official acts of the last three years presented itself as a problem too big to be undertaken. In some instances persons married by him in the last three years now have children. Some of the deeds attested by him have since changed hands several times. Persons against whom informations were made out by him have been convicted in Court and served out their sentences. A Justice of the Peace disposes of a variety of matters in the course of three years.

As the simplest and most re-assuring way out of the dilemma, it was proposed that the Legislature be asked to pass a special bill validating all of 'Squire Robinson's official acts of the last three years. Such a bill was prepared and sent to Harrisburg, where it was introduced into the Legislature on Tuesday. There is no reason to anticipate that it will not be passed promptly and also approved by the Governor.

DIED FROM FRIGHT

Fire at Philipsburg Caused Death of Aged Woman.

Overcome by excitement during a fire which started in her dwelling house at Philipsburg last Friday morning, Mrs. Angela Denning Jones, collapsed, and before medical attention could be given her, expired from heart failure. Another tenant, Mrs. Minnie Harris, who was in ill health, became so nervous over the conflagration that an ambulance had to be called and the hysterical woman removed to the hospital.

The fire, which broke out about 8:15, is of unknown origin. Fanned by the high wind it soon became a roaring furnace, and it looked for a while as though the entire block of dwellings would be consumed. Philipsburg fire fighters, assisted by several companies from surrounding towns, got the conflagration under control about 11 o'clock, and soon all danger was past. The household goods of the four families who were tenants in the building were all carried out safely, although they were somewhat damaged by water. The damage is estimated at about $60,000.

WAR-TIME COAL DEAL BASIS FOR LAW SUIT

Purchaser of $36,000 Tract Sues Chas. H. Rowland Estate

ON TRIAL FOUR DAYS

A civil suit in Centre County Court, which reminded one of noted land cases of which there were so many years and years ago, was begun on Monday, with Judge Miles I Potter, of the Union—Snyder district, presiding. The plaintiff was James H. Cullen, of New York. The defendants were Mrs. Annie C. Rowland, John E Fryberger, of Philipsburg, and J. K. Johnston, of Tyrone, administrators of the estate of the late Congressman Charles H. Rowland. Involved was a tract of coal land in Clearfield County purchased by Cullen from Rowland during war times for $36 000.

The greater part of the coal in question was of the out crop type and taken out by what is known as the stripping process. For the plaintiff it was represented that the land was purchased by him upon Rowland's assurance that it contained from 150 000 to 200,000 tons of marketable coal. Rowland received $18,000 in cash and notes for a like amount for the land. He paid an agent $550 as commission for negotiating the sale.

After operating the mine for some time Cullen abandoned it, contending that the quantity of marketable coal contained was much less than had been represented by Rowland. Testimony was offered to show that at a meeting held in Philipsburg by Cullen and Rowland they endeavored to effect a compromise, Rowland offering to cancel an unpaid note and also give Cullen $5000 in cash, but that Cullen refused to settle on such terms. Subsequently suit was entered by Cullen against the Rowland estate.

Out-of-town counsel participating in the case included M. Ward Fleming, of Philipsburg, for the plaintiff, and A. M. Liveright, of Clearfield, for the defendant. A large number of witnesses were called by both sides. Trial of the case was marked by numerous objections filed by opposing counsel. At times it was necessary for Judge Potter to have the jury withdraw while attorneys discussed the admissability of evidence. Whereas the burden of the plaintiff's testimony was that Cullen lost money in the deal because the quantity of marketable coal was less than had been represented, the defendant contended that loss, if any, resulted from the sudden termination of the war and the subsequent sharp decline in the selling price for coal. For Cullen it was brought out by witnesses that government inspectors had stopped shipments of some of the coal because it was of inferior quality.

The case had not been concluded at the time of our going to press.

Concluding last week's session of Court, the following cases were disposed of:

Commonwealth vs. David Hendershot. Verdict on Thursday morning of guilty and motion made for a new trial.

Commonwealth vs. Bert Lyle. Indicted for violation of liquor laws. Prosecutor Jesse A. King, State Police. Defendant entered a plea of guilty and was sentenced to pay the costs of prosecution, $500 fine and six months in the County Jail.

The last case to be heard was that of Perry Detwiler, of Spring Mills, charged with selling intoxicating liquor. The prosecutor was Charles F. Leitzell, who alleged that the defendant had sold liquor to his father-in-law, Harry Hoy.

Mr. Hoy was placed on the stand and stated under oath that he had purchased liquor from Detwiler bat the latter in turn produced witnesses discrediting the evidence of Hoy. The Detwiler witnesses stated that Hoy accompanied Willam Musser, whose murder by his nephew last July created such widespread interest, to the Lewistown fair and had there bootlegged during the day. Detwiler was found not guilty by the jury, and the costs divided between the prosecutor, Charles F. Leitzell and the defendant.

Wounded by Unknown Gunner.

Roy Zong, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Zong, of Rockview, was painfully wounded in the left arm, just below the elbow, last Tuesday while working on the Spring Creek road near the Fishburn Hill, for J. L. Peters, Benner township road supervisor. The report of a firearm from the vicinity of the wooded hillside preceded the sting of the bullet in the young man's arm. The lead pellet passed through the member. No clue has been found as to the identity of the careless gunner.

Had Arm Amputated.

Ira McKibbon, of Roopsburg, who sustained a mangled arm in the machinery of the stone crusher at the Chemical Lime plant recently, had that member so badly injured that physicians were forced to make an amputation just at the elbow on Tuesday. The young man is now getting along as well as could be expected.

MR. AND MRS. J. H. NEIDIGH WEDDED 59 YEARS AGO

Anniversary Happily Celebrated at Pine Hall Home.

WERE EARLY SETTLERS

Surrounded by their children, grandchildren and great-grand children, various relatives and a host of neighbors and other friends, at their beautiful home at Pine Hall, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Neidigh celebrated their 59th. wedding anniversary Sunday March 1st. A delicious dinner was served. Their many friends in that section paid calls during the day and others sent cards of greeting

John Henry Neidigh is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Neidigh, pioneer settlers in that section, where he first saw the light of day 80 years ago. His wife is three years his junior. She is a daughter of George and Katherine R. Kustaborder, also early settlers, and both spent their youthful days in that section. Just when the young couple were in their spring-time of life, the Confederates began their terrific siege that finally resulted in honorable surrender. Mr. Neidigh and his youthful bride-to be drove to the Boalsburg parsonage where they were united in marriage by their pastor, Rev. W. H. Gough. Their union was blessed with a number of children, namely: N. C., Anna and May, of State College; Mrs. John Lytle and J Calvin, of Altoona; Mrs. Blanche Hoy, of Waddle; William, now deceased; Mrs. Margaret Cronemiller, of Patton, and J. D., residing on the old home farm. There are 24 grand children and 9 great grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Neidigh first went to housekeeping as tillers of the soil where D. S. Peterson now lives at Baileysville. Some years later they took Horace Greely's advice and landed in Michigan. This did not prove a profitable venture, however, and after four years they returned home to begin farming anew. They were successful at once and soon had one of the best kept and most productive, as well as delightfully hospitable, farm homes in that valley. They retired in 1907 to a cosy home at Pine Hall.

SPECIAL COURT

Philipsburg Bootleggers Given Jail Sentences.

At a special session of court on Saturday morning, the following pleas of guilty were heard:

Patrick Tonsall, pleaded guilty to breaking and escaping from the Western Penitentiary at Rockview. He was sentenced for a term of from 6 to 12 years, to be computed at the expiration of his original sentence.

Samuel Meyers, of Philipsburg, pleaded guilty to the manufacture and possession of intoxicating liquor. Meyers was an old offender, having served a three months jail sentence about a year ago for the same offense. The court sentenced him to pay a fine of $200, the costs of prosecution, and to serve a jail sentence of not less than 6 nor more than 12 months.

Charles Williams, of Philipsburg, charged with the same offense, and likewise being a second offender, received a like sentence.

John Swartz, arrested by the State Police at the same time as Williams and Meyers, in the recent Philipsburg clean-up, pleaded guilty to manufacturing and being in possession of intoxicating liquor. He is the father of 10 children and stoutly maintained that he had never sold any liquor, simply manufacturing small quantities for his own use. It was his first offense, so the court sentenced him to pay a fine of $500, the costs of prosecution, and to serve not less than 3 nor more than 6 months in the county jail.

Arnold Treason House Is Doomed

Mansion Where Surrender Plot Was Hatched to Be Razed.

New York.—There are four scenes to this story:

In an upper room of a house that overlooks the sunlit waters of the Hudson two men are sitting at a table. It is early morning. They have just had breakfast. One poses rather debonairly and dashingly. He is a young man of thirty, gay, handsome and winning. His uniform is the red, laced coat of a British officer. The other man is fully ten years his senior. His face is strong, powerful, bitter, the smoldering fires of anger cloud his eyes. His uniform is the buff and blue of a high ranking officer in the Continental army. His hand makes notes on sheets of paper. He passes them over to his companion. "Carry them in your shoe," he says. "I think everything is arranged now." . . .

Some weeks later. From a stone building in his shirt-sleeves emerges the same British officer. A silent crowd is assembled. Pity and sympathy for a brave man are written on the faces of all. The young British officer takes his place between two Continental officers and they begin to walk forward—toward a gallows and a cart.

Years later on his death-bed in London the older man is tossing. Memories haunt him of a land where his name is an execration. His fevered mind goes back to the days before a certain black morning when he was a leader of gallant men on many a stricken field. "Bring it out," he mutters. "Let me die in my old American uniform. God forgive me for what I have done to my country." . . .

The last scene is of the present day. A group of men are conferring. One of them is the head of a state institution. The state requires a site for a new building. It is determined upon. The papers are drawn. The old house that stands on the grounds will come down to make way for a modern structure. With its demolition there will pass a landmark that stands for one of the blackest pages in American history.

That, in brief, is the story of "Treason House," the old Joshua Hett Smith mansion in West Haverstraw, Rockland county, which is to be torn down in order to erect a new state orthopedic hospital on its site. In "Treason House" Benedict Arnold and Major John Andre sat at breakfast after their midnight meeting on the banks of the Hudson. In "Treason House" they perfected the last details of Arnold's traitorous plan to surrender West Point to the British. From "Treason House" Andre emerged to meet capture and death, and from it Arnold went forth to blot an honorable career with the stigma of the traitor.

Arnold and Andre Meet.

Raging at the treatment meted out to him by congress and the supreme executive council at Philadelphia, Benedict Arnold had come to West Point as commander of the post. He was the hero of Quebec and of Saratoga. One leg wounded in two places bore witness to his bravery on the field. He was Washington's most trusted general. He had a record for leadership and sacrifice in the Continental cause second to none.

Writing under the name of "Gustavus," he entered into communication with Sir Henry Clinton, commander of the British forces in New York, and was answered by an aid, Andre, who assumed the name of "John Anderson." Arnold offered to station his troops so that the British would encounter no difficulty in seizing West Point. It was a strategic post on which the British had long had their eyes. The correspondence went on. A personal meeting between Arnold and Andre became imperative if the underhand scheme were to go through.

And so one day the British sloop-of-war Vulture, with all sails set, glided up the waters of the Hudson and anchored not far from Stony Point. Arnold had laid his plans well. When darkness came a small boat went alongside the Vulture and Joshua Smith boarded her. At Arnold's command he was seeking a man who was to "bring important news" to the West Point commander. A long blue surtout covered Andre's uniform as he stepped into the small boat, and Smith did not know that the silent passenger he was rowing to shore was a foe of the newly born republic. All he knew was that Arnold had sent him out to bring some one back, and he was doing so. The bow of the boat grated on the sands of the western shore in the shadow of the mountain known as Long Cove. For a moment Smith left the boat and disappeared into the bushes, where a muffled and cloaked figure met him.

"Is he here?" demanded the figure.

"Yes," said Smith.

A Long Conference.

"Bring him to me," came the order. Smith went back to the boat and in a few minutes Andre had made his way through the thicket to the side of the other. A few words of identification were exchanged.

Throughout the parley two humble figures waited in the background. One of them was Smith, miserably uncomfortable in the boat at the water's edge; the other a servant Arnold had brought down from Smith's house to hold the horses while he carried on his plot. The hours wore on and Smith finally came up to voice a warning.

"It's getting dawn," he told them. "If the gentleman is going back to the boat he had better go now."

But all was not finished yet. There were important points still to be cleared up. Arnold suggested to Andre that he stay one more night on shore, promising that he would be rowed safely out to the Vulture the following night. Andre fell in with the plan. Through the little village of Haverstraw they rode in the dawn, past the challenge of the Continental sentries and on to Treason House.

Once within its doors, they went to an upper room, where they could resume their plotting in secrecy. Their long conference in the night air had made both of them hungry. As over breakfast they went on with their discussion, they were interrupted by an ominous sound. A detachment of Continental soldiers had seen the Vulture in the river and had brought a cannon down to the shore. The booming thunder of its shots was rolling up and down the Hudson. Arnold and Andre looked out of the windows of Treason House and saw the Vulture haul up her anchor and move swiftly down stream and out of range. Andre was frankly worried.

"It may not be so easy to get back to the ship," he said.

Benedict Arnold thought for a moment. "I will give you a pass that will take you safely back to New York by land if you cannot reach the Vulture," he announced. The pass was duly written out authorizing the Continental guards to let "John Anderson" through their lines.

Andre's Fatal Journey.

All that day Andre remained in the upper room of Treason House looking out over the river at the far-off Vulture and counting the hours that remained until darkness should fall and he could attempt his escape from the American lines. Evening came and he demanded of Smith, the house's owner, that he row him out to the British sloop. Here, however, an obstacle appeared. It seems that Smith was obdurate in refusing to run the gauntlet of possible Continental fire on the way to the ship. He offered instead to guide Andre down to New York by road, and with this offer Andre had to be content.

Under cover of darkness they crossed to the other side of the river and began the journey that was to end in Andre's capture at Tarrytown.

Benedict Arnold had expected the British to come up the river to seize West Point on the day arranged for. Confidently he was waiting for them. But on the scheduled day General Washington himself arrived on the scene, sending ahead of him his aid, Alexander Hamilton, to announce his coming. The news broke on Arnold like a bombshell. At practically the same moment there arrived a note from Andre telling of his capture. In that crisis Arnold proved that no matter how great a scoundrel he might be he was nevertheless a man of extraordinary courage. In a calm tone he asked his roomful of Continental officers and guests to excuse him for a few minutes. He went to the door and ordered his servant to saddle his fastest horse and bring it up at once. Then he stepped upstairs to his wife, the former Peggy Chippen, whose machinations on behalf of the British have since been established.

"The plot has been discovered," he announced. "I must escape at once."

Arnold Escapes.

Again he returned calmly to his guests, chatted with them for a few moments and for a second time excused himself. There came a clatter of stones, a flying horse and a rider charged down the steep trail to the river bank, known to this day as Arnold's path. At the shore waited Arnold's six-oared barge. He flung himself from his mount, settled himself in the stern of the boat and drew out his pistols.

"Row," he commanded. "Down the river until I give you the word to stop."

The barge pulled out into midstream and the rowers bent to their oars. Off Verplanck's Point there still lay the Vulture and it was alongside the British sloop that Arnold's barge finally pulled up. He stepped on board. The news was carried to Washington. "Whom can we trust now?" was all he said.

Within a few days a letter to Washington arrived from the fugitive. He asked his former commander to protect Mrs. Arnold "from every insult and injury that a mistaken vengeance of my country may expose her to."

The defection of Arnold does not seem to have been of much service to the British cause. He led their troops in a number of expeditions, none of which were of any great importance.

The memory of that black day at Treason House seems to have been with him to his death. The hatred of the countrymen he had betrayed reached overseas and struck him down. Brooding through the years, he fell victim to a racking nervous disease from which he died in 1801, calling on his deathbed, it is told, for his old American uniform.

And now Treason House itself is to disappear forever. Perhaps it is well. The recollections which it summons up out of the past are best forgotten.—New York Times.

MUSEUM OF DAUGHTER OF KING OF BABYLON FOUND

Many Priceless Objects Discovered by Expedition of British Museum and Pennsylvania University.

Philadelphia.—A museum, the property of the daughter of the late king of Babylon who ruled in the Sixth century B. C., has been uncovered and many priceless objects obtained by the joint archeological expedition of the British museum and the University of Pennsylvania at Ur of the Chaldees, according to the December report of the scientists made public in London and Philadelphia recently.

The scientists who are digging in the buried city of Amraham in ancient Babylonia reported that the museum contained objects dating as far back as 2500 B. C.

C. Leonard Woolley, head of the expedition, recounted what had been accomplished at the Hall of Justice called E-Dublal-Makh, the other site on which the archeologists are working.

"We have worked out the history of the building," he said, "from Nabonidus, king of Babylon in the Sixth century, B. C., back through the repairs done by Sin-Balatsu-Ikbi, a hundred years before, by Kuri-Galzu, the Kassite, in the Sixteenth century; by Ishme-Dagan, king of Isiin, 600 years before that, to its original foundation by Bur-Sin of Ur about 2250 B. C. Even below the walls of Bur-Sin we have come upon brick work of a more primitive sort bearing no name but marked with two finger prints deeply impressed to hold the mortar, a record of the shadowy kings of the second dynasty of Ur who may have reigned some 2,800 years before Christ. . . .

"From an inscription preserved in the museum at Yale we know that the last king of Babylon, Nabonidus, following ancient precedent, consecrated his daughter, Bel-Shalti-Nannar, as high priestess of the moon god at Ur and built an E-Gig-Par Op cloister for her dwelling, and, incidentally, he lays down the most admirable moral precepts for her guidance. . . .

"The ground plan of the place answers perfectly to the word 'cloister' used in the Yale inscription and there can here be no doubt we have the actual convent of the priestess.

"The contents of the building were not less important than its character. School materials, writing exercises, etc., seemed to show that the religious houses then, as now, had their educational side, and the daughter of Nabonidus, himself a well-known antiquary, appears to have kept a museum in her convent, for there were found in the ruins a large number of objects of such different dates that it is hard on any other theory to account for their presence all together in rooms of the latest period."

Eastern Beliefs Concerning Crystal

The two largest flawless crystal spheres in the world were recently exhibited in New York. One of them measures nine inches in diameter and the other just fifteen-sixteenths of an inch less. The value of the pair is placed at $50,000.

The spheres were brought to New York from China, where they were cut from a perfect Burma crystal with a small metal hatchet. The work required infinite patience.

In ancient times in the Far East and in Europe crystals were supposed to be ice in permanent form. In Japan small crystals were said to be the breath of the Great White Dragon, while the larger ones were supposed to come from the Violet Dragon.

Errors Bring Joy to Stamp Collector

Philatelist Ever on Watch for Printer's Mistakes.

Washington.—Consider the philatelist; how contrarily he works. Queer things have always been done in the name of collecting and all collectors have come to be regarded as having rules of their own by which they live and operate. But nothing they have done is more contrary to usual laws than the manner in which they have turned mistakes into fortunes. Since time was, people have professed to derive indirect profit from their mistakes, but the collector actually does reap material gain from errors.

Where do all the rare stamps come from? For what does the philatelist value them? There are the old stamps, of course, such as the postmaster stamps of the days before there were government issues, and there are stamps valuable for their sheer beauty of design and execution. There are the stamps of foreign countries which have had various political experiences such as the Alsace and Lorraine issues of 1870-1871. These are interesting as history.

Error Increases Value.

But an exceedingly important and, to the layman, surprising source of rare stamps is the error. In every issue of stamps errors occur and every error increases the value of a stamp for the philatelist, but the error he loves best and the one for which he watchfully waits whenever a new issue of stamps is due is the inverted error. The inverted error is always liable to occur when the issue is a bi-color job, which means that the sheets of stamps must be printed twice. There is the danger, from the standpoint of the philatelist, that in the second printing at least one sheet will be turned upside down and come out with an inverted center. The last time the philatelic world had a thrill of this kind was in 1918, when the bi-color aero stamp issue was printed.

A young private stamp collector picked up $15,000 for the error made in this issue. The collector was Mr. Robey of Washington, a jeweler whose hobby is philatelism. He had been watching for the appearance of the new issue and when it came he started out to buy a 24-cent aero stamp. Sure enough, in a little branch post office of Washington he discovered his error—a stamp with its airplane inverted. He bought the entire pane of a hundred stamps and then called the clerk's attention to the error. The issue was called in and a hunt made for other errors by the post office officials, but no more were found. The other three panes of the sheet of errors were discovered at the bureau.

Mr. Robey sold his block of stamps to Eugene Klein of Philadelphia for $15,000 and the dealer in turn sold them to E. H. R. Green, son of Hetty Green, for $20,000. Mr. Green broke the block, kept some for his own collection and put the others on sale on the regular market. They bring $750 each now and the stamp is said to have a "good future." Which means, hold on to your 24-cent error if you have one.

The first inverted error on record was made in 1869 in the 15, the 24 and 30-cent values. Some of these got into the hands of collectors before they were found and called in. An unused copy of the 15-cent value was sold in New York recently for $4,100, and an unused 30-cent value fetched $3,500. Stamps, like eggs, are valuable in proportion as they are scarce.

In the 1901 Pan-American set there were inverted errors in the 1, 2 and 4-cent values. These have never demanded prices in four figures, but they disappear into collections not on the market.

The 5-Cent Red Error.

The most sensational error that has ever been made in the United States was the famous "5-cent red error" of 1915. Its value is not yet great because it had such a wide distribution before it was called in. The price ranges from $10 to $14, according to whether the stamp has ten perforations or eleven, or no perforations at all. The 5-cent error is interesting on account of the way in which the mistake came about.

When the plates were ready for printing a proof was pulled and submitted to the inspector for approval. On proof of plate 7942, the inspector marked three impressions as lighter in tone than the others. These three were ordered removed from the plate and new impressions made. When the printer called for the roller to make these new impressions he received by mistake the roller for the 5-cent value, which greatly resembles the 2-cent roller upside down.

Nobody caught the mistake and the plate was approved and put to press. From March 7 until May 2 the sale of the issue went on before the error was discovered.

It is not to be supposed that only four errors have been made since 1869. Errors are being made all the time. Errors of inks and colors and errors in perforating. Down at the bureau of engraving and printing they confess to many mistakes in every printing but to the expectant, eager philatelist it seems a long time between errors.

Demolish House Where William Penn Preached

Oxford, England.—Silas Norton's house, where William Penn preached one of his unpopular sermons in 1687, has recently been demolished.

Penn was at that time in Oxford only as a visitor. He entered as a student at Christ Church college at the age of sixteen, but was very shortly expelled for his religious opinions. Thomas Lowe, who induced Penn to become a Quaker, was for a good many years an Oxford resident.

Penn's old college, by way of amends, has his portrait hung conspicuously in its hall.

As the Pilgrim divines were chiefly Cambridge men, Oxford, not to be outdone, makes the most of all its American connections. Lord Baltimore is still without a memorial in his old college, Trinity, but as Trinity has portraits of two of its students well known in American history—William Pitt, who won the continent, and Lord North, who lost half of it—the college feels satisfied.

SECRET CANNIBAL CULT FOUND IN BELGIAN CONGO

Explorer Tells How Human Flesh Is Eaten.

London.—A "secret society of cannibals" who consume human flesh purely from a sense of public duty is the discovery claimed made in the Belgian Congo by E. Torday, who describes his adventures among these folk in a book entitled "On the Trail of the Bushmongo," just published here.

Torday, who in the course of study of the Bushmongo arts and crafts made a collection for the British museum, is enthusiastic about the artistic qualities of the Baluba—as the secret cannibals are called.

The tribe does not profess cannibalism publicly, and it was necessary to obtain their confidence before it was possible to obtain inside information as to their rites. Torday liked the Baluba and they liked him; hence he got behind the reserve which has prevented the ordinary traveler penetrating their secrets.

Dealing with the "public duty" aspect of the tribe's cannibalism, the writer says: "In every village there are a certain number of people who sometimes, simply out of a sense of duty for the public good, dispose of the corpses of slaves and malefactors by eating them." The idea was that this prevents souls of the dead returning to take vengeance on the village for wrongs suffered during life.

This sort of "public duty" cannibalism is conducted on secret society lines, owing to unpopularity of the practice among the neighboring white folk. There is a distinct rite of initiation. The introducer of a new member must first "touch his tongue with a piece of pudding dipped in the stew (human), then he will be made to eat some of this in tiny bits and finally will swallow a piece of flesh."

After this the novice has to attend several meetings, and on each of these he will consume smoked human flesh. Torday goes on:

"When he has been sufficiently hardened to the practice by eating the preserved flesh used on these occasions, he will be given opportunity of becoming a full member by assisting at consumption of a fresh corpse."

The Baluba men are expert weavers and the women excel at embroidery. Torday says they make beautiful clothes, and the pile of some of their cloth is short and close, like the finest velvet. Another cloth is made with damask designs and among the colors used are "delicate mauve-yellow, with a black."

He writes that it is as sculptors and carvers that the Bushmongo are known in the world, and within the last few years African sculptures have become the craze.

The principal objects produced are boxes, cups, dishes, drums, chairs and, ranking above all, human figures, of which the most remarkable are the statues of ancient kings.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

SET ASIDE FUNDS FOR LEGION WORK

Trustees of the Knights of Columbus have appropriated $75,000 to the rehabilitation work of the American Legion so that this work may be financed properly during the current year, while the Legion endowment fund is being raised to insure that the work shall be carried on as long as there is need of it, National Adjutant Russell Creviston has announced.

At the same time Mr. Creviston stated that the American Legion auxiliary and the Forty and Eight have each pledged $25,000 to finance the child welfare program during the year. The child welfare program will be financed in future with half of the amount derived from the income on the endowment fund.

Resolutions expressing the Legion's appreciation have been sent, at the direction of the national executive committee, to each of the organizations.

"It was found necessary," Mr. Creviston said in announcing the gifts, "to secure assistance from sources other than the regular income channels of the Legion to carry on its work for disabled veterans of the World war and for orphans of veterans properly during the present year. The Knights of Columbus, the American Legion auxiliary and the Forty and Eight have generously come forward to supplement Legion finances for these purposes.

"These gifts make it possible for the Legion to continue in 1925 to render these services, which are so important to the entire nation, on the same high plane as it has rendered them in the past. They will also permit us to make the necessary extensions and additions to our program.

"The immediate emergency has been met. These gifts insure these services for 1925, but no more. It remains for the Legion to make sure beyond peradventure of a doubt that this work shall be carried on effectively and on the same humane basis of personal contact so long as there shall be a disabled veteran or an orphan of a veteran who needs our help. That object will be accomplished by the American Legion endowment fund of $5,000,000, which we are now raising throughout the nation."

LOWDEN'S PROMISE

RESPONDING to the invitation of the American Legion to serve on the Legion's honorary committee to raise a $5,000,000 endowment fund for orphaned children of the World war and disabled veterans, former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois wrote James A. Drain, national commander of the Legion:

"During the war I was so grateful for the patriotism and the spontaneity with which our young men responded to their country's call to go across the sea to take part in the worst war that ever afflicted the world, that I said whenever occasion presented itself, we would show those who survived, upon their return, and the dependents of those who should fall on the other side, our deathless gratitude. In serving upon your committee, I am but redeeming in a very small way the promise I then made. . . ."

Would Consolidate in Aiding Needy Veterans

Crosscup Pishon post of the American Legion, Boston, would consolidate relief efforts of organizations rendering aid to disabled and needy veterans. The plan is to eliminate duplication of relief work and to increase its general efficiency.

Conferences with officials of the United States Veterans' bureau, officers of the state department of the American Legion, American Legion auxiliary and other military and civilian organizations have indicated a unanimous sentiment in favor of unification and standardization of relief efforts.

Ultimately the consolidated effort is expected to develop into a veteran "vigilante" with the confidence of the public. Organizations professing relief to disabled or needy veterans will have to satisfy the veteran-civilian central group that their purposes are honest and their methods are wise.

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

OVER THE COUNTY

In order to avoid striking another car on the streets of Centre Hall, recently, two young men from Linden Hall, driving the Ford coupe owned by Captain Phillip Shoemaker, crashed into a telephone pole with rather disastrous results to the Ford.

A number of residents of certain sections of Millheim, who have been patiently waiting for several years, for the Keystone Power corporation to extend their service lines had their wishes granted last week and a number of them are revelling in the sudden access to unlimited light.

A large flock of wild geese were seen flying northward last week by residents of Millheim. This may indicate an early spring, but judging from the way the bottom fell out of local thermometers last Saturday morning, we are inclined to believe that "heavies" will be the "uniform of the day" for several weeks at least.

Edwin Graden, of nearby Spring Mills, was unfortunate enough to lose his winter's supply of smoked meat recently, when the smoke house on his property burned to the ground, together with all it's contents. Mr. Graden had just finished smoking the meat of two hogs that day and thought that the fire in the building had been completely extinguished. A spark had evidently lodged in the roof, however, causing the conflagration late in the night.

Mrs. A. B. Budinger, of Snow Shoe, was signally honored last week by being invited to attend a Kiwanis banquet at Philipsburg as the guest of honor. It happened that the popular song "Twilight Time," composed by Mrs. Budinger, was on the musical program and the leader of the glee club casually said that the author was a friend of his. The committee immediately communicated with Mrs. Baddinger asking her to be a guest of honor.

Quite a lot of excitement was occasioned in Rebersburg last week, when Miss Lorraine Secrist of that place, was attacked by three boys on her way home from prayer meeting, and despoiled of her beautiful long hair. She was one of the few young girls in the community who had retained her long hair in the face of the rage for the "bovish bobs" and according to her story, had received an anonymous letter a few days before the outrage, relative to her unbobbed locks.

Due to an unprecedented demand for the products of the Millheim Knitting Mills products, that firm recently opened a new factory in Philadelphia. C. E. Lykens, proprietor of the mills, stated that he found it impossible to secure skilled labor enough in Millheim and vicinity to take care of the rush of work in some departments. The machinery for making men's and boys' golf hose has been shipped from the Millheim mill and installed in the Philadelphia factory. The firm's output is now well over a thousand dozen pair daily, and even at this enormous rate of production it will require months to fill the orders now on hand.

Near East Relief.

In former years the special opportunity for contributing to Near East Relief has been given to Centre County in February. This year it will be in March. For the past year Near East Relief has been obliged to confine its scope entirely to the training of the boys and girls for whom they were already responsible, though there is terrible need among the children in the refugee camps. During this year 25% of the 60,000 in the orphanages have been graduated into self-support or adoption. Those remaining are too young to be thrown upon their own resources, 61% being under 12 years of age. America has invested a large amount of capital in these children and dividends are already to be seen in the lives of useful young men and women who are supporting themselves and bringing a new spirit of optimism and cooperation into the lands of the Near East. In the name of these young people to whom the generosity of Centre County has helped to give life and hope, in place of despair and depravity, the Committee for Near East Relief gives hearty thanks to former contributors and asks for their continued support for this year and until the completion of a work already much more than half done. $5 will support one child for one month; $60 will support one for a year. Contributions from individuals and organizations may be sent to Chas. M. McCurdy, Treasurer, Bellefonte.

FARM CALENDAR

Timely Reminders from The Pennsylvania State College.

GROW CLOVER AND ALFALFA—Sweet clover will not take the place of red clover and alfalfa as a hay crop. Its chief value is as a pasture and soil improvement crop. Stick to the reliable legumes, clover and alfalfa, for protein hays

PROMOTE FARM HEALTH—Thirty-six counties in Pennsylvania used knock-down community forms for making concrete septic tanks on the farm last year. Has your county adopted a program involving this very necessary assistance to farm sanitation? Ask the county agent or home demonstration agent about it.

HOTBED NEEDS ATTENTION—When manure is placed in the hotbed the soil temperature will rise considerably after a day or two. Do not sow seed until the soil temperature drops to 75 degrees. After the plants are up the hotbed will need frequent attention. Water thoroughly and only when necessary rather than lightly and frequently. Watch the ventilation carefully, especially on sunny days. Most losses of plants in hotbeds are due to improper watering and ventilating, say vegetable garden workers of the Pennsylvania State College.

PLANT TREES AND SHRUBS—March is the planting month for hardy trees, shrubs, vines and herbaceous perennials. This work may best be done now before the other work on the farm increases.

TEST SEED CORN EARLY—Good seed corn promises to be scarce and high priced. Testing your own supply now will give you a better chance to get other seed if your own corn does not grow. Delay may mean no corn crop. Use the sand box or the rag doll method.

SUNSHINE HELPS—Direct sunlight is important in preventing leg weakness in chickens. Be sure your chickens get a large share of this great health giver.

May Reproduce Old Mill

The Philadelphia chapter of the Society of Colonial Dames of America has submitted to many organizations in Pennsylvania a plan to erect on the original site a replica of "The Old Swede's Mill," the first mechanical enterprise to be set up in that highly industrialized region. The original structure says the Detroit News, was built by direction of Governor Printz, in 1646, eight years after the first Swedish colonist arrived there. The stream on which the old mill stood, now known as Cobb's creek, flows through what is now the southwestern outskirts of Philadelphia. The proposed reproduction will be made a gift to the municipality.

Tempered Criticism

He was only twelve, but he contrived to throw the apple of discord into the boarding-house to which he had been sent for convalescence after influenza.

It came about because they all read the postcard he had left on the hall table.

He had written: "There are three extraordinary old geesers stopping here, but one of them is rather a decent old geeser as geesers go."

THE GOVERNOR'S DECISION

By FRANK ALLEN

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE governor sat at his desk, staring at a letter in his hand. Presently he touched his bell. A smart, alert secretary appeared.

"I shall not see anyone this afternoon except a woman named Mrs. Winthrop," he said. "She is to be admitted as soon as she arrives."

"Very good, sir," answered the secretary, and disappeared again.

Governor Smith read the letter again, and his thoughts went traveling back along a road that he had kept closed, even against himself, for 20 years. The letter was a pathetic appeal from a mother on behalf of her only son, sentenced to serve ten years in prison for killing a man in a drunken brawl. "He is a good boy," wrote the mother, "but his father was a convict, and he never had a chance. I implore you to give me a hearing. I shall come to the executive mansion this afternoon at four. Do not refuse to see me, if you have any mercy. Lucy Winthrop."

The governor was back 20 years inside the penitentiary at Mansfield.

"Smith," said the head warden, "the governor wants to see you."

The convict followed the man into the office, where the governor was standing before the window.

"This is the man, sir," said the head warden, and the governor turned round and took the prisoner's hand in his.

"Smith, you are a free man," he said. "I have decided to issue you an unconditional pardon. In due time, if you show yourself worthy of it, your rights of citizenship will be restored to you."

He paused and added:

"Remember, Smith, there is the stain of murder on your soul. You killed a man. There is no way of disguising that, even to yourself. That you had great provocation extenuates your crime, but does not excuse it. I hope you will report to me, Smith, from time to time. Now you can go back to your wife and child."

It was three years since the convict had seen his wife. The child had not been born when he was sent to prison. When Smith saw the free heavens above him and heard the clang of the prison gates behind, the tears streamed down his cheeks.

He went to the little cottage where his wife had lived. The place was for sale. Nobody knew anything about her. Smith spent weeks trying to locate her. That he did so at last was purely by chance. He met her father in the street. The old man passed by as though he did not see him. Smith ran back and seized him by the arm.

"For heaven's sake tell me where she is," he cried. "She is not dead."

"She is dead to you, forever," answered the old man.

"You have no right to keep her from me."

"I am not keeping her from you. She is keeping away from you because she wants no more to do with you. She helped you to gain your freedom, now she is going to keep hers. She has secured a divorce."

Smith had killed one man, and the memory of his crime was strong upon him. Nevertheless he was ready to kill another. He looked around; the street was almost empty and it was growing dark. He seized the old man by the throat.

"Tell me where she lives, or I will strangle you," the ex-convict shouted. He saw a look of terror in the other's eyes. The old man stammered out the address, and the ex-convict, releasing him, hurried away.

The old man had been too terrified to lie. Smith found the place; it was a clean little cottage on the outskirts of the town. Smith would never have found it without the information. He rapped at the door, and a moment later he was staring into his wife's terrified eyes.

"You have come back!" she whispered.

Before the man could reply he heard a child calling from one of the rooms. He hurried in. Upon a little cot the baby was seated, and, as the father entered, he looked up at him and smiled. Something seemed to burst in the man's heart. He snatched the child in his arms and covered him with kisses.

"Put down my child!" exclaimed his wife's voice at his side, and Smith turned to see a fury confronting him.

"You—murderer!" the woman gasped. "How dare you come here and pollute my child with your touch?"

"Your child?" the man stammered.

"Yes, mine. The court gave me the custody of him. You have no part with him any more. You have no right here. Leave this house and never let me see you again!"

This was the woman who had clung to him so lovingly when the guard led him away to begin his sentence. The man looked helpless, and the woman, seeing his distress, softened a little.

"I don't want to hurt you more than you have hurt yourself," she said. "Don't you see that you must not come into my life again?"

"No," said the man stupidly.

"For the boy's sake," she answered. "What do you think his life will be if he grows up to discover that his father was a convict?"

"We can go somewhere,' the man pleaded. "We can begin life anew."

"And live a lie? No," she answered. "The court has set me free, and given me the child. I am sorry for you, but you must go. It is for his sake."

Smith put on his hat and went out without a word. He had hardly set his foot outside the door before it closed.

From that moment he had set to work desperately to retrieve himself. He had taken a position, through the kindness of the governor, who saw to it that his past should never come to light among his associates. He had saved money, had gone into politics. He was elected a congressman. Then, the record of his unflinching integrity aided him, and he had been swept into the governor's chair by a large majority of the voters of his state. And the secret of his past died when the old governor, his friend, died, leaving him a legacy sufficient to insure him against all future want. It was the supreme act of the old governor's life, that he, who had not been all he had dreamed of being, should have raised this convict out of the dust.

"Mrs. Winthrop, sir," said the secretary.

A black-garbed woman hurried into the room and sank down into the chair which the governor had courteously accorded her.

"I got your letter, madam," said the governor.

"You will pardon him," the mother pleaded. "He never had a chance. He was a convict's son."

The governor was looking into her face. She did not know him. But he would have known her anywhere.

"Tell me what happened to the father," he requested.

"He was a murderer," sobbed the woman. "When he came out of prison I cast him off. I could not let the boy grow up to know that his father had killed a man. But it was in the blood. Still, Henry struck in a moment of anger. He had no intention to kill."

"But the father, madam," persisted the governor. "What became of him?"

"How should I know?" answered the woman. "He went to the bad, I suppose. He was a worthless man. I could not let Harry know that his father was a murderer."

"You have never regretted your decision, madam? It did not occur to you that you had some responsibility for the father's future?"

"No!" she cried wildly. "Don't let us talk of that scoundrel; tell me that you will pardon my son."

She raised her eyes for the first time and looked into the governor's face. Something there seemed to terrify her, for the moment, for she looked hard at him, and the governor met her gaze patiently. If she recognized him—but she did not recognize him. Her eyes fell, then she sank to the floor and, kneeling before the governor, with her hands clasped in appeal.

"You must pardon him," she said. "You, who are so upright, to whom temptation has never come, cannot understand the temptations and passions of a boy bereft of a father's love and protection. I did everything I could for him. I changed my name. I moved to another city. But it was hard to give him the proper environments, and in spite of all he turned out wild, but he will never do wrong again."

"Get up, madam," said the governor. "I have decided to pardon the boy on one condition. This is, that he report to me from time to time, that I may know how he is progressing. I hope to help him, too; if he wants his chance to run straight, he shall have it. That is all, madam. The pardon shall be delivered to the warden tomorrow. And—if I may venture on a suggestion to you—remember that charity covers all sins. Be charitable, even in your memories of the man you married and cast away. Good afternoon."

Distinctive Colors of Moose, Caribou, and Elk

The caribou, or reindeer, which is a member of the deer family, is closely related to the reindeer of Europe and Asia. There are at least two distinct species. The Arctic caribou, which inhabits the Far North from Greenland to Alaska, has a gray or light brown coat in summer. In the coldest season the animal is almost white. The woodland caribou is darker in color and larger in size. The moose, also a member of the deer family, is purplish-gray. It is much larger than the caribou. Strictly speaking, there is no elk in America. The name is correctly applied to the great flat-horned deer of Europe, but in this country to the wapiti, which is the large, round-horned stag. The wapiti is related to the red deer of Europe rather than the true elks. The American elk, or wapiti, originally inhabited large parts of the American continent, but it is now confined almost entirely to the northern Rockies. It is yellowish-brown on its upper parts, while its sides are gray.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Spreading the Word

The Scriptures have been printed in 175 different tongues by the American Bible society alone. The total number of languages and dialects represented is more than four times that figure. Among these are strange and obscure names such as Quecha, Kurmalj, Ulungore, Mossa, K'pelle—an unpronounceable series. Special efforts made to bring the Bible out in the languages of the North American Indians resulted in 1923 in arrangements to produce a Cheyenne Bible. Translation is going on, too, in several Indian dialects in three different parts of Central America.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

To Preserve Wild Fowl

According to Dr. W. E. Nelso, chief of the bureau of biological survey of the United States government, the number of wild water fowl is gradually decreasing, but there are still more wild water fowl today than there are feeding grounds for them. Ducks get about 93 per cent of their food from vegetation and wild geese get 97 per cent. A move is on to establish feeding grounds in the sloughs and marshy grounds for them. Owners of such tracts are urged to sow wild rice, pondweed, red head grasses, wild celery, spatterdock and muskgrass for the benefit of these fowls.

Cutting the "Gordian Knot"

This expression has its origin in the tale of Gordius, a Phrygian peasant, owner of a yoke of oxen, who became king. He dedicated his car and oxen to Zeus, and the knot of the yoke was tied so skillfully that an oracle declared that whomsoever should unloose it would be ruler of Asia. When Alexander the Great came to Gordium he cut the knot in two with his sword and applied the prophecy to himself.

Centennial of Benzine

Next June a hundred years will have passed since Michael Faraday announced to the Royal society his discovery of benzine.

Faraday made benzine for the first time in the laboratory of the Royal institution, where today Sir William Bragg continues the great search after truth in other directions.

Benzine has been one of our greatest benefactors, but the chemistry of the new compounds it introduced has proved the curse of civilization. Benzine is easily converted into carbolic acid, the valuable antiseptic that saves thousands of lives, but a "turn of the wheel" in the chemist's laboratory will convert carbolic acid into a dangerous explosive, and the study of such explosive compounds, in many of which benzine is the starting point, has led to the methods of destruction which form the great tragedy of science.—Children's Newspaper, London.

Belief Seems Justified

A Greenville (Me.) newspaper says that it is a very old Indian tradition that all the bull moose of eastern and northern Maine make journeys to the west shores of Moosehead lake at the close of the year for the purpose of casting their antlers. "Though the story has passed for fiction among the residents, there are not a few old hunters and woodsmen who believe it, and relate tales about the abundance of moose antlers among the maple woods 25 miles north of this village."

Safety Lessons Learned

Saving the lives of 769 children of school age is credited to safety instructions in the Detroit schools for the five years, 1919 to 1923, inclusive. Decrease in child fatalities has been from 1.64 a thousand in 1919 to .78 in 1923, a drop of more than 50 per cent; in relation to automobile registration the decrease has been from .85 a thousand in 1919 to .33 in 1923; on the basis of total population the decrease has been from .22 a thousand to .18 a thousand.

MISS SPRING VOGUE APPEARS; NOVEL FABRICS IN BLOUSES

SPRING has knocked—to say "Come on out, the weather's fine" and Miss Vogue has opened the door and stepped outside to join her caller. She is the observed of all observers, and we have been on the lookout to see what she will wear.

To begin with the coat, it appears to be of ottoman silk or some other fabric with a lustrous corded surface, in a light, wood brown shade. Its lines are straight, like those of its forebears of the winter, but they are easier and it is very simply designed and lined with crepe de chine, also in light brown. Spring has banished fur from the collar, sleeves and all other positions—except one. Such is the affinity between fur and coats that fur still kisses the hem of this garment where it appears in a fluffy band, shading through brown and tan to white. Miss Vogue has other coats but we may be sure this one is correct. Being simple in design and rather casual in style it will prove adaptable to almost any sort of wear.

One of the New Spring Coats.

There are many coats in the spring collections that have no trimming and there are just as many that have decorations, mostly in band effects, of embroidery, applique work, and outline needlework. A pretty whim of the season discloses scenery sketched in colored silk floss, about the bottom of light cloth coats. It began with Chinese subjects but has wandered into other fields. Bandings of self material appear on coats of ribbed silk, made by cutting the bands so that the rib runs in a direction different from that in the coat.

If the story of overblouses and tunic blouses could be divorced from that of the fabrics used to make them it would be short and quickly told. But fabrics have changed the destiny of blouses and their story is long—literally and figuratively.

To begin with the overblouse—it has grown longer, except in tailored models finished with a hip band. The tailored blouse is developed in pongee and other wash silks, in English broadcloth and other suitable cottons, with long or half-length sleeves. Its usual adornments are lengthwise plaits and a few buttons and its collar is a high turnover or opens in a "V" at the front. Slip-over models with epaulette shoulders are popular, but some models are buttoned all the way down the front. As a finishing touch the scarf tie is favored.

Dressier types in overblouses are lengthened by means of short peplums which are single or double. Most of them have short sleeves and jabots are liked as a front adornment, but the new fabrics, striped, barred or figured, lend themselves to very plain designs in blouses, either in the overblouse or tunic blouse. One of the overblouses is shown in the picture, made of printed crepe in tan and blue. Bindings of plain silk or small buttons are about all that printed fabrics need in the way of adornment, and many of them rely upon separate collars of lace or sheer fabrics to provide the proper neck finish.

Overblouse in Tan and Blue.

The tunic blouse is as varied as dresses are and is made of the same materials. Printed silks are at their best in these long blouses worn over plain skirts, and the plain silk appears in yokes and bindings on the tunic. Two colors, in plain crepe de chine, make very handsome tunic blouses, in which wide bandings of a darker shade are introduced in the tunic and the two colors merged by embroidery.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

Former Newsboy Now a Big Contractor

Nearly 30 years ago a lad named Samuel R. Rosoff, an immigrant from Minsk, landed in New York, and two weeks later he began selling newspapers in Park row. A few days ago Samuel became a subway builder, for the Rosoff Engineering company, of which he is president, was announced as the lowest bidder to construct a section of the new route along St. Nicholas avenue and through Washington Heights. Rosoff's bid was $4,617,000. Among his friends, Rosoff is known as "the Ash King," because of his contract with the street cleaning department to collect ashes and refuse in Manhattan and the Bronx. His friends say he took the contract "on a shoestring," for he had no disposal plant at that time. Rosoff also is president of the Rosoff Sand and Gravel corporation, one of the largest companies supplying contractors, builders and brick plants in the East.

At forty-three Rosoff is "keeping on." He has no office hours. He's there when not busy elsewhere. Twenty hours without sleep is not unusual for him he asserts. "But, I play, too," he says. "I find time for my favorite diversions, horseback riding and ice skating."

Rosoff maintains a suite in the Hotel Pennsylvania, but his home is on the outskirts of Marlboro-on-the-Hudson. His wife is active in the affairs of the town, and his two sons are in the Milford school, Milford, Conn., preparing for Yale.

J. C. Davis Closes Out Great Adventure

Characterizing the war-time operation of railroads by the federal government as a "great adventure," James C. Davis, director general of railroads for the government, has brought that adventure to a close with his final report. The railroad admininstration will remain in existence for a short time longer to defend some damage suits and to collect interest and principal of loans made to the roads, but its work is practically ended.

Mr. Davis shows that it cost the government $1,674,500,000 to run the railroads during the war. The final settlement was correctly called "the largest liquidation involving a single commercial interest ever undertaken." The liabilities have practically all been paid, without litigation in any case, and Mr. Davis proudly calls attention to the fact that by boiling down the damage claims of the railroads and offsetting them they were reduced to only a little more than 6 per cent of the total originally asked.

The man who has so satisfactorily wound up this huge business was born in Keokuk, Iowa, in 1857 and obtained his education there and in London, Ontario. He was admitted to the bar when only twenty years old and practiced in Keokuk, serving also as city solicitor and mayor. In 1903 he went to Des Moines as an attorney for the Northwestern railway, and moved to Chicago as its general solicitor under federal administration in 1918. In 1921 the President appointed him director general of the federal railroad administration.

Abd-El Krim Brings Spain to Her Knees

Spain, beaten to her knees in northern Morocco, is ready to make peace with the Riff tribesmen who have whipped her, granting to their leader, Abd-el Krim, the full government of his own state, providing he will disarm and will recognize the sovereignty of the sultan of Morocco, which Spain has guaranteed. But the doughty Abd-el Krim, or Sultan Mohammed, as he is known at home, has his own ideas of peace terms and does not hesitate to state them. This short, stout, black-bearded man—an educated lawyer, not a warrior—says every Spanish soldier in Morocco, from the eastern frontier to the Atlantic, must be withdrawn to Ceuta, Melilla or Spain, and that nothing short of the complete abandonment of the Spanish protectorate will satisfy the Riff race, which must have full independence and national sovereignty. He asserts the Riffs have never sought to establish a republic but will continue the present form of government, an absolute monarchy, since that has proved best for those people. But they do not and will not recognize the authority of Sultan Mulay Yussef, declaring his sovereignty over Morocco is a fable and that he is really a prisoner of the French.

Though Abd-el Krim does not lead his armies in battle, leaving that to his brother, Prince Mahmed, he directs their operations. And knowing his strength, he is determined to have his way.

Dr. F. H. Martin May Give Us Longer Life

Dr. Franklin H. Martin, chairman of the board of directors of the Gorgas Memorial institute in Chicago, believes that from seven to twelve years can be added to the average span of human life, and the institute is now carrying on a national health campaign with this end in view. Not only is there promise of longer life, but incidentally of the addition of innumerable millions to the economic wealth of the nation.

The institute, established in memory of the late Gen. William C. Gorgas, will carry on his idea of the exercise of preventive measures and the use of scientific medicine to check disease and wipe out pestilences. By employing modern ideas of sanitation and the principles of periodic examinations, such as practiced in the United States army during the World war, the civilian population of the country can be placed on the same health basis as the army, according to Doctor Martin. Thus by keeping people well the bills of insurance companies, the losses to industry through sickness and the personal distress of ill health will be avoided, resulting in an estimated annual saving of more than $1,000,000,000.

Do You Know This Liniment and Salve?

Time-Tried Home Remedies That Have Many Friends in This Neighborhood.

Porter's Pain King is known and used in many homes hereabouts. This old reliable liniment has been making friends since 1871, and the directions wrapped around every bottle tell how to use it for colds, aches and pains, soreness, swollen joints, strained muscles and rheumatic twinges. It seldom fails to drive out the pain.

The Salve is made of the same pure drugs and herbs that go into the liniment and is named Porter's Pain King Salve. Its base is lanoline (pure wool fat), in itself wonderfully healing and soothing. Porter's Pain King Salve is recommended for burns, cuts, bruises, sores, wounds, chapped and cracked skin, boils, felons, itch, cold on the chest, croup, lumbago, varicose veins and piles.

It is said Porter's Pain King, the liniment, and Porter's Pain King Salve, can be found in four of every five homes in this county. How many know all their many uses? Why not read the directions today?

DOUGHBOY MEETS MAN HE FOUGHT IN NO-MAN'S LAND

Recognizes Voice of Cook Repeating Breakfast Order in Kitchen.

Houston, Texas.—"Stack o' wheats, java," sang out Preston Maxwell, former doughboy who went over the top at St. Mihiel, now waiter in a cafe here, one morning recently. He had just taken an order from a customer who was in a hurry and had promised to rush it.

"Stack o' wheats and java!" echoed a voice from the kitchen.

The voice was not in excellent "English," or rather in excellent restaurant slang, but betrayed a German accent.

It made Preston Maxwell stop and do some thinking. To save him he could not help believing he had heard that voice somewhere. He went to investigate.

In the kitchen Preston Maxwell came face to face with Rudolph Lubkert, formerly of the Bavarian guards. And then Maxwell remembered where he heard the voice.

In the kitchen Maxwell stiffened. He was again Private Preston Maxwell

The Two Shook Hands and Began to Talk.

of Texas. Lubkert stood at attention. He was again Private Rudolph Lubkert of the Bavarian guards.

"Dam," said the Texan.

"Ja," smiled the German.

The two shook hands and began to talk. The "stack o' wheats" was forgotten. So was the customer in the front.

The last time Private Maxwell met Private Lubkert was when Maxwell went over the top at St. Mihiel. Their bayonets met, they parried, each seeking an opening to thrust the other. While they were struggling a shell exploded and they both went down. They both remained in hospitals for months, it was learned. After the war was over Lubkert came to America and finally reached Houston, where he has taken out citizenship papers.

"How did you recognize him?" Maxwell was asked.

"If you ever fought a guy with a bayonet you'd never forget his face. If he did any talking you'd never forget his voice," Maxwell said.

Inventor Ends Life With Drug He Created

London.—Opportunity knocked too late at the door of Joseph Born, a German chemist, who came to England last August to sell a chemical invention for the synthetic manufacture at low cost of a number of expensive drugs, including certain poisons. He had devoted his life to perfecting his formulae.

His funds ran out and on New Year's day—the day he was notified to vacate his house with his wife and children for nonpayment of rent—his body was found in Kensington Gardens. The coroner produced the following note found on the body: "I must die by my own invention. Isn't it funny?"

Later it developed that a British firm had just made him a conditional offer of £2,000 for his invention.

Attic Inmate Finds He's Heir to $10,000

Anderson, Ind.—Charles E. Woods, sixty-five, an inmate of the Gospel Trumpet Old People's home, has been advised by attorneys he is heir to $10,000 or one-third of the $30,000 estate of his brother, near Buffalo, N. Y. Woods occupies a scantily furnished room in the attic of the home and his only worldly possessions are the contents of the room. He appears happy, however, and when advised of his good fortune appeared unconcerned about going to New York state after it, asserting that he was happy here.

Chicago.—Dorothy Cudshoff, six months old, was drowned in the bathtub in the home of her parents at 7428 Colfax avenue. Left alone for a moment while the mother sought her clothes, the infant toppled from the bath rest into the water.

Angola, Portugal's African Brazil

Reported Earthquake Brings It Into Prominence.

Washington.—A recent dispatch from Africa stating that "the island of Port Alexander" had been swallowed by the sea in an earthquake, serves to bring into news prominence Angola, Portugal's huge dominion in western Africa, says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society.

"There is no island of Port Alexander off Angola," says the bulletin. "Port Alexander, or more properly Porto Alexandre, is an excellent haven on the southern and most remote coast of Angola, protected by a long sandy peninsula. This is a true peninsula, well above the water even at highest tide, and could not properly be referred to as an island. The name has also been given to a fishing town that has sprung up in recent years on the mainland shore inside the protecting spit.

Has 1,000-Mile Coast.

"If an earthquake occurred in the immediate vicinity of Port Alexander it may either have destroyed the mainland town or a small supplemental settlement on the peninsula. A third possibility is that an island at some distance was destroyed and that the news of the disaster, coming through Port Alexander, caused the scene of the tragedy to be confused with the latter town.

"Angola covers a large part of southwestern Africa. It stretches along the Atlantic ocean for a thousand miles and extends eight hundred miles or more inland. A comparable slice of territory in southeastern United States would have a coast line extending from southern Georgia to New York city and, excepting Florida, would include an area greater than all the states south of New York and the Great Lakes, and east of the Mississippi river.

"This vast region, although it was discovered by Portuguese sailors in 1442 and although it has had Portuguese settlements since 1575, has not been developed to any great extent. It was really a victim of the discovery of Brazil and the route to India, for into those more promising regions was poured all the colonizing energy of Portugal at a time when that country was the world's leader in colonization. The stream of energy and men passed Angola by, and it has been a sort of Portuguese backwater ever since.

"But there are also potent geographic and economic reasons for Angola's lack of development. With the exception of former German Southwest Africa, which adjoins it to the south, Angola has the dreariest and most forbidding coast of any section of Africa.

"Sand dunes cover much of the land immediately along the coast, with here and there bare rocky promontories jutting out of the shifting grains. Where the sands are not in dunes a scrub grows, but it is so sparse that from the sea the coast appears utterly barren. Where water courses enter the sea there is often a luxuriant vegetation in their valleys. It is in such long, narrow oases that are grown the vegetables and fruits for the few coastal settlements.

"Behind this worst foot which Angola thrusts forward is a region of surprisingly good potentialities. The coastal desert strip extends inland from 12 to 120 miles and then the country rises by a series of huge terraces to a broad plateau which extends eastward into the heart of Africa. On each higher terrace conditions are better than on that below. The transition is from aridity and lack of vegetation through semi-aridity to a reasonably well-watered park land of grass and scattered trees. Much of this plateau is an excellent region for Europeans, healthy, cool, reasonably productive and much of it free from the tsetse fly.

A West Coast Transvaal.

"In the southern portion of Angola's plateau is a sort of little Transvaal, displeased with alien control from which ordinary treks did not seem to free them, a group of Boers took the wearisome journey across the great Kalahari desert and settled in this remote region. Many perished on the road, but those who won through have established solid communities in which the Portuguese officials have granted them the liberty and self-government in their communities which they so much desire. In their settlements, surrounded by houses of typical Transvaal architecture, and with the great heavy wagons in use, one might imagine himself a thousand miles away in the vicinity of Johannesburg or Pretoria.

"At several points railways extend from the coast of Angola to the almost temperate zone plateau.

"All of the Angola coast is indebted to the cold current that bathes it for cool sea breezes and in general a much more pleasant climate than its latitude entitles it to. But the current is especially beneficent to the Mossamedes and Porto Alexandre districts of the south. These are the healthiest portions of the coast, with relatively low mean temperatures, dry, cool air and freedom from malarial mosquitoes. The cool current also brings to the southern coast vast schools of fish like the cod, and the chief industry is fishing. The climate is excellent for drying fish, and a few miles inland are inexhaustible supplies of salt. The region ships thousands of pounds of dried fish and much 'cod liver oil.'"

THAW HIRES "FIGHTER"

James J. Skelly, young Washingtonian, has obtained a rather unusual secretarial position, that of "fighting secretary" to Harry K. Thaw, who is now making his home on a newly acquired estate near Winchester, Va. Thaw advertised in the newspapers for a secretary who could use his fists if necessary, so Skelly applied.

Finds Prehistoric Irrigation Ditches

Expedition Makes Important Find in Arizona.

New York.—Indications of prehistoric extensive irrigation systems and dense population unequaled elsewhere in the United States have been found by Dr. P. E. Goddard, curator of archeology at the American Museum of Natural History, who has just returned from an archeological reconnoissance near Globe, Ariz. Doctor Goddard, who will go West again to prosecute the work, said he believed that a thorough study of the region would throw light on the connection between the prehistoric people of the Valley of Mexico and those who lived and developed a civilization in pre-Spanish times in the country around the upper Colorado and Rio Grande rivers. Doctor Goddard's work already has occupied several weeks and promises rich returns from a scientific standpoint.

Finds the Ditches.

Taking with him as an assistant Ehrich Schmidt of the museum staff, Doctor Goddard began what it is intended shall be a thorough examination of the ancient remains in the region drained by the lower Salt and the Gila rivers. He found that there had formerly been an intricate series of ditches which furnished water for large tracts of land in the vicinity of Phoenix and Florence, Ariz. His investigations developed that, in many instances, the modern irrigation ditches are merely the prehistoric ones cleaned out and repaired.

In this region, Doctor Goddard said, there also existed structures of considerable size, the walls of which are still standing. He found several pueblos one story in height with common walls. The ruins, which cover a large stretch of territory, vary in size as well as in age.

Doctor Goddard discovered that some of the pueblos were located near valleys where irrigation was not necessary for the successful raising of maize. It is one of these latter, located between Globe and Superior, which he has decided upon for complete excavation. In this particular ruin the communal house contains about one hundred rooms as is indicated by the remaining walls. Already a skeleton in fair state of preservation has been recovered there, together with fragments of pottery and ornaments of shell and turquoise.

In the same neighborhood Doctor Goddard said that he had found well-preserved cliff ruins. It is his view that a thorough examination of these will reveal specimens of the greatest scientific value and interest.

Explored Before.

In 1887 and 1888 some of this territory with its irrigation canals and buildings, was examined by the Hemingway expedition sent out from Harvard university under the leadership of Frank H. Cushing, but only meager reports of its discoveries were ever published. There is, however, one well-preserved ruin in Casa Grande which is at present under the protection of the National Park service of the federal government.

The new field of exploration for the American Museum of Natural History was made possible through the interest of Mrs. William Boyce Thompson, who for some time has made a close study of archeological remains she has encountered in the Southwest. Some years ago Colonel Thompson established a home near his mining properties in the neighborhood of Superior, and Mrs. Thompson, feeling that one trained in exploration should have an opportunity of examining the ruins, recently asked the museum to send a representative to undertake the investigating work.

Mr. Schmidt, who has been left in charge of the explorations during Doctor Goddard's visit here, will continue directly under the doctor's supervision. It is expected that, by means of material assistance and co-operation from Mrs. Thompson, a collection of marked scientific value will be made and brought to New York, where it will be correlated with the great mass of similar material which the American museum now possesses.

On Tuesday it was admitted that it had been suggested to Dr. Becht's wife that he resign. Dr. Becht refused, it was said, unless assured he could retire on a pension. A bill partially providing for this is now in the Legislature.

Present Philipsburg Bridge.

At a meeting of the borough council of Philipsburg on Monday evening, it was announced that the Centre County Commissioners had a steel bridge over Wallace Run near Snow Shoe which they had no longer any use for, due to the abandonment of the road, and which they would present to the boroughs of Philipsburg and Chester Hill to take the place of the old wooden bridge over the Moshannon creek, recently demolished by a flood. It was further stated that the cost of removing the structure from its present location to Philipsburg, and there erecting it, would be approximately $300. The matter was looked upon in a favorable light and the councilmen and a committee was appointed to investigate the matter more thoroughly.

Scarlet Fever Spreads.

The scarlet fever epidemic which has been raging in Beech Creek for the past month has at last crossed the creek into Centre County and five cases are now reported in Blanchard. Beech Creek now has a total of 36 cases, a number of which however, are well on the road to recovery. Although the schools which have been closed for some time have been reopened, they are thoroughly fumigated daily and every possible precaution against further spread of the disease has been taken.

World Loses Another of Its Historic Spots

There is a dingy old building at the corner of Dock and Moravian streets in Philadelphia which is about to be torn down to make way for a new structure. With it will vanish a spot about which memories cluster dim but poignant.

In 1837 William E. Burton founded the Gentleman's Magazine, in imitation of the famous English periodical of the same name. Shortly before, Edgar Allan Poe had come up from Richmond to seek a wider field for his poems and stories. His occasional contributions to contemporary journals attracted the attention of Burton, who engaged him, in July, 1839, to sit in with the editorial staff of the Gentleman's Magazine, at a salary of $50 a month. Poe had previously declined to accept any editorial position, fearing that the confinement would handicap his powers. His child wife, Virginia, soon began to develop the terrible disease which was to take her from him, however, and in his desire to provide her with comforts he was constrained to accept regular employment.

For three years he sat in the corner room of the second story at Dock and Moravian streets and wrote his immortal criticisms and essays. Then he and his employer quarreled over Poe's prospectus for the Penn Magazine, and in 1842 their connection ceased.

But the dark little room has seemed to be filled ever since with the atmosphere of his brooding spirit, and for many years it has been a mecca for all throughout the world who have read his songs and prose. Now at last it is to go and the place thereof shall know it "Nevermore."

Picea Engelmanni

Engelmann Spruce is essentially a Rocky mountain evergreen, for its geographic distribution is very largely confined to the Rockies, P. A. Smoll, Pa Naturalist of the Rocky Mountain National park, tells us. It ranges from the southern limits of Arizona and New Mexico to well up into the Canadian Rockies, while a limited amount of it is found in the states of Washington and Oregon, apart from the Rocky mountain system.

The name, Engelmann Spruce, is appropriate and well established among students of western trees, although among the lumbermen of the West, one may often hear the name "spruce" used when this tree is intended. The first discoverer of the tree cannot be named with absolute certainty. In the history of the Lewis and Clark expedition of 1805, mention is made of a "spruce" which may have been the tree which we now know as Engelmann Spruce, but, on the part of many of our early explorers, there has been much confusion in the distinction of the firs and spruces and therefore this conclusion is open to question.

Jealousy Analyzed

"There is, perhaps, no such thing as love without an occasional display of jealousy," says Burton Rascoe, writing in Hearst's International. "But in every case I believe it will be found that the one who is jealous has lost for the moment his or her self-assurance. It may be because of illness or overwork or a protracted lack of diversion.

"When I have been jealous or my wife has been jealous I have always noticed that our jealousy could be traced to one of these three things. When I have been jealous, they have been occasions when I felt myself at a disadvantage, when my egoism was not top-notch.

"The man who knows that he can depend upon his wife not to leave him in the lurch or desert him in a crisis or find some one else irresistibly more attractive, is pretty sure of himself, sure of his power to attract, sure of his worthiness as a man. This is true also of a woman."

Steam From Volcano

Plans are under way to pierce the sides of Mount Tatio, an active volcano on the west coast of South America, to get the steam generated by the natural fires beneath the mountain. Most of the energy will be piped out for use in making electricity. Estimates show that as much current can be produced in this manner each year as would require the consumption of a half million tons of coal in an ordinary plant. It is said the steam is so pure that it can be run directly into turbine engines without the usual costly cleaning processes. In Italy thousands of horsepower have been developed in this way.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Bores

"Once a bore, always a bore," says Irving Cobb in Hearst's International "When a man speaks of himself, invariably he is interested, for he has what to him is the most fascinating topic on earth; but how rarely does he succeed in being interesting to the audience! Take the average confirmed egotist, whether he be an after-dinner speaker, a chronic candidate for office or a mere lay worker, and harken to him as he studs his conversation with capital I's, planting them in thicker and ever thicker as he goes along, and what do we get? A mental picture of a picket fence extending all the way around a vacant lot—that's what we get."

Whales Have Gone

Captain Scammon, a noted authority on whaling, estimated, according to Nature Magazine, that about 1853, 30,000 gray whales were on the California coast. During the period from 1919 to 1922 only one was captured there.

B. H. S. DEFEATED

Mt. Union Stopped Local Stars on Our Floor 27-20.

Mount Union H. S. walked off with the game and most of the honors, sporting and otherwise, last Saturday night at the Armory. The M. U-ites played the game according to the rules and intents of basketball and their system seem to be O K. The several minor attractions which occurred during the game did not interrupt their efforts to garner points nor were they distracted by any outburst of guerrilla warfare. Coach Riden's new team worked well, but evidently lacked seasoning. With such material the prospects for next year are very bright. The final score, 27—20.

B. H. S. Girls Lose.

Last Friday evening at Lock Haven High School our girls were two points shy in the final tally, the final score being 21—20. Fouls and good foul shooting on the part of Lock Haven was responsible for the defeat. Our girls scored nine field goals to their opponents' six but committed, in the judgment of the referee, umpire and linesman, about three times as many fouls. A peculiar elasticity in the rules and several novel amendments to the same kept our girls continually in the referee's disfavor.

The Story of AxeMann.

"Girard," a writer in the Phila. "Inquirer," several days ago published the following:

No town tells a better story in its name than humble little AxeMann in Centre county.

It is in reality a fine monument for five generations of the most famous ax makers in America. Thomas Mann, the original of the family in this country, began to make axes 175 years ago and the family is still at it.

William and Harvey Mann started their first Pennsylvania ax factory near Bellefonte 97 years ago. Their product has literally played a large part in changing much of America from woods to fertile fields.

Amity, in Washington county, grew around the old Amity Presbyterian Church. But that town once had a noted character who claimed to be the real author of the Book of Mormon.

Rev. Solomon Spaulding, a graduate of Dartmouth, was the man. He left the manuscript, which came into possession of Sidney Rigdon.

When the latter heard about Joseph Smith's operations up in New York he went to him and showed him the Spaulding book. Rigdon was a printer and he always claimed that the Book of Mormon was an only slightly changed version of Spaulding's work, which was to have been published under the title "The Manuscript Found."

The latter was a romance which purported to have been derived from Indian relics and tablets which Spaulding, who was an Indian antiquarian, had unearthed.

Salesman Killed by Train.

Jack Kenyon, employed as a salesman for the Maytag Electric Washer Co. in the Philipsburg district, was instantly killed on Saturday night when the small car he was driving was struck by a P. R. R. passenger train near Bigler. Apparently the unfortunate man did not see the oncoming train as he drove leisurely onto the crossing on his way home to Philipsburg. The car, a new Ford roadster, together with a washing machine, was totally destroyed. The man's neck was broken when he was thrown from the car and he was dead when picked up. Mr. Kenyon had been a resident of Philipsburg for a number of years and is survived by a wife and two children. Just several weeks ago he was in Bellefonte for some time arranging for the establishment of the new Maytag branch office in the Bush House block.

Two Fire Alarms.

Bellefonte fire companies were called out in answer to two alarms of fire last week, neither of which proved to be serious nor occasioned any damage. The first was on Thursday evening, when an alarm was turned in from the Samuel Shallcross home on Spring street. The "fire" proved to be merely the flue burning out. The second was of the same nature and was at the automobile accessory store owned by Paul McGarvey on Bishop street. The alarm was turned in by Ralph Eyer, who observed flames and sparks shooting out of the chimney on the McGarvey building.

Fire Gutted Garage.

Fire of unknown origin in the garage back of the Bellefonte Academy last Saturday at noon, destroyed two automobiles and gutted the interior of the building. One of the cars burned was a Buick touring car, the property of Coach Snavely, and the other a Ford touring car, the property of a student. A Cadillac touring car which belonged to Professor James R. Hughes was in one end of the building but was untouched by the flames. The damage is estimated at several thousand dollars including the loss sustained by the owners of the burned autoes.
